HOW DID THE FUND PERFORM LAST YEAR AND WHAT AFFECTED ITS PERFORMANCE?

Performance over the last year was challenging with the broad market largely uninterested in concepts other than artificial intelligence (AI), financial speculation, “Mag 7” (Nvidia, Apple, Microsoft, Alphabet, Amazon, Meta Platforms, Tesla), and profitless companies. Unequivocally a difficult investment environment for our process and investment approach here at Nuance. The portfolio’s overweight position in the Consumer Staples sector was a primary detractor to performance. Outperformance by Estée Lauder Companies Inc. (EL) was more than offset by underperformance in Clorox Company (CLX), Henkel AG & Co. KGaA (HENKY), Kimberly-Clark Corporation (KMB), and Beiersdorf AG (BDRFY). We continue to believe that transitory concerns around slower growth in multiple household and personal care product categories have presented strong risk reward opportunities in the sector. Stock selection within the Financials sector contributed positively to performance, driven primarily by Northern Trust Corporation (NTRS). The portfolio’s overweight positioning in the Utilities sector negatively impacted performance primarily driven by our position in California Water Service Group (CWT), which lagged the market, but remains a top risk reward in our opinion. Our positioning in the Industrials sector contributed positively to performance as our holdings within the Ground Transportation industry outperformed, primarily our position in Werner Enterprises, Inc. (WERN). Health Care negatively impacted performance, driven primarily by our investment in QIAGEN NV (QGEN), which we have added to over the course of the year. Within the materials sector, our investment in AptarGroup (ATR) underperformed. The portfolio saw positive attribution from underweight positions in Real Estate, Communication Services, and Consumer Discretionary, while our underweight positions in Energy and Information Technology negatively impacted performance. Finally, our cash position was a drag on performance for the year.
